

Images to challenge stereotypes of people and places.

1. Cut the images along the dotted line.
2. Give groups of 3 the half labelled B
3. Ask them to draw what they think is on the other half of the image
4. Give out the halves labelled A and ask the groups to compare this half with their drawing.
5. Were there any surprises? Was their debate amongst the groups about what would be on the other half of the image? Did one person's ideas dominate other ideas?

A

B

A

B

A

B

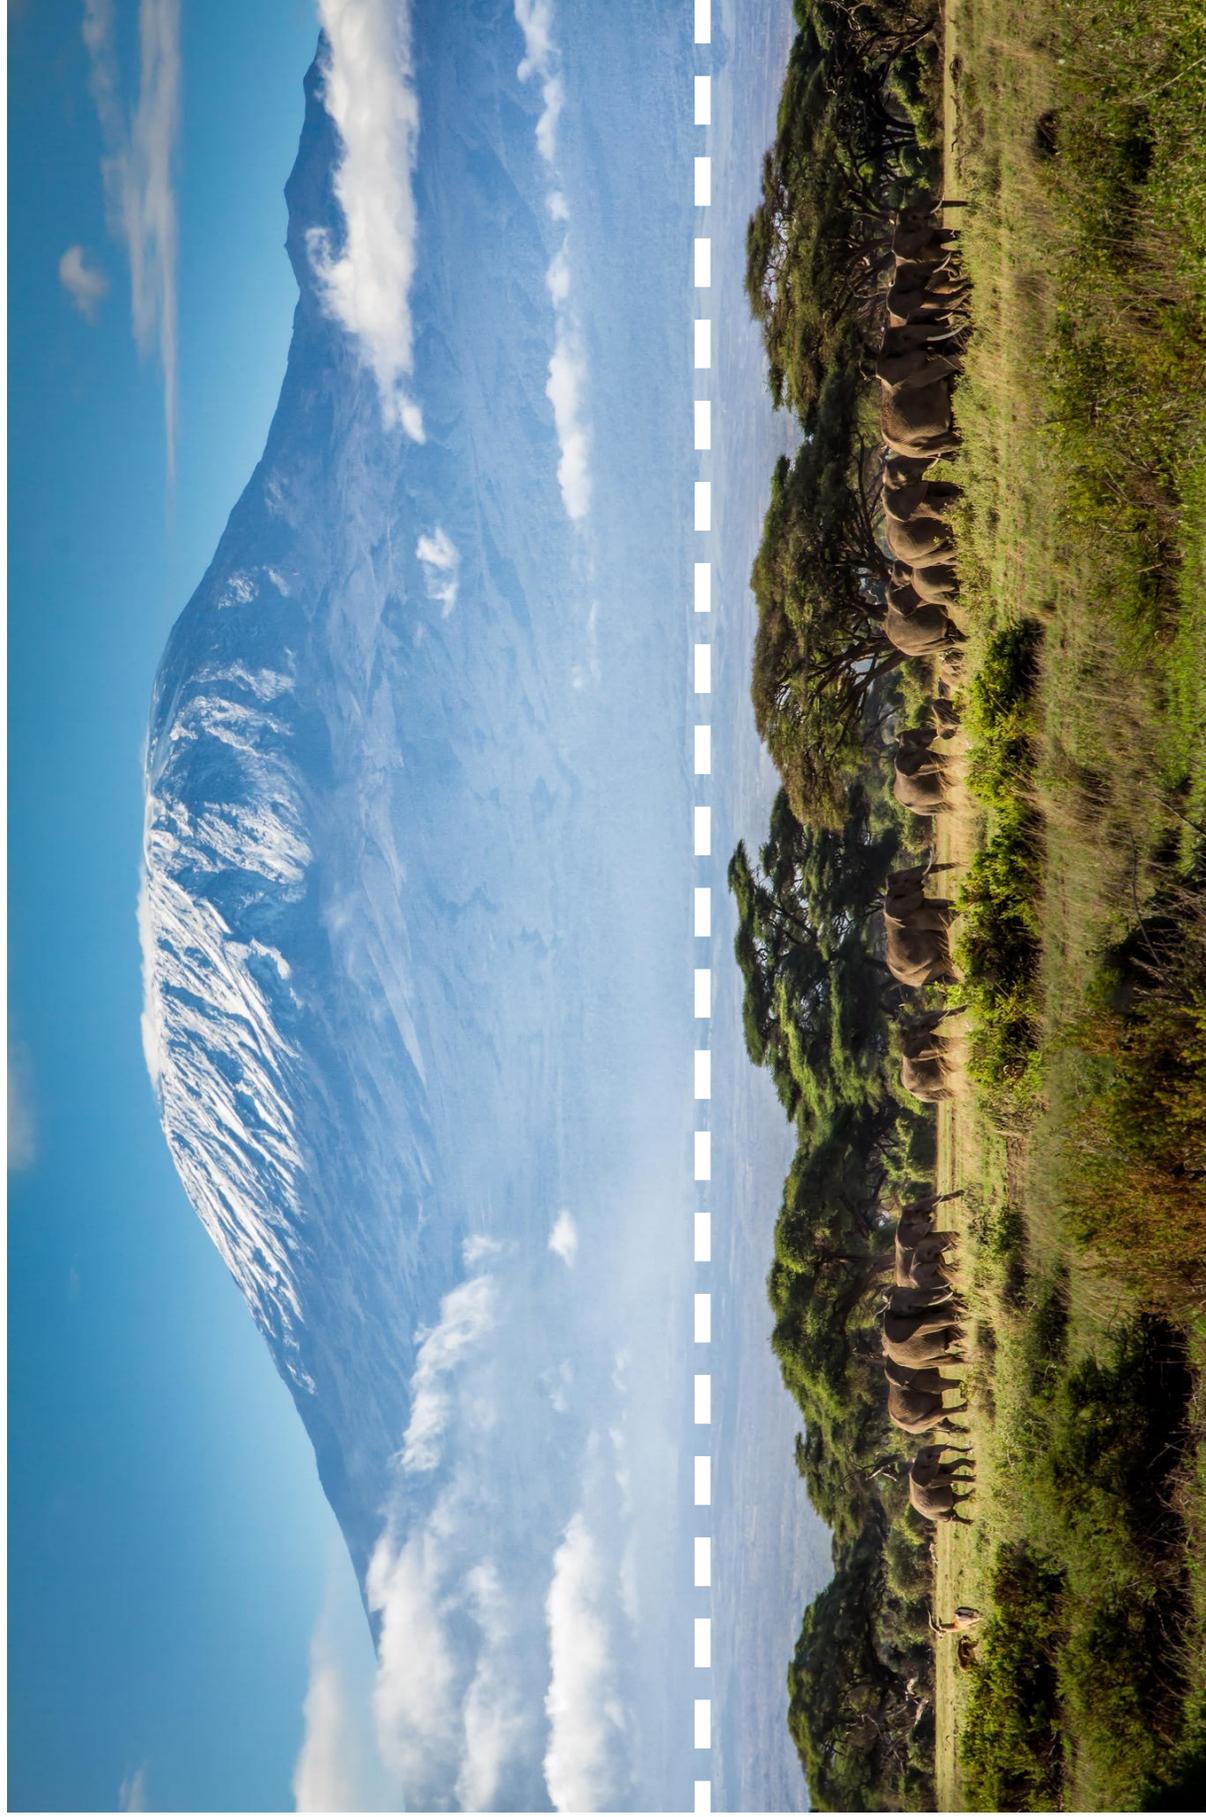

A ✂ B

A ✂ B

B

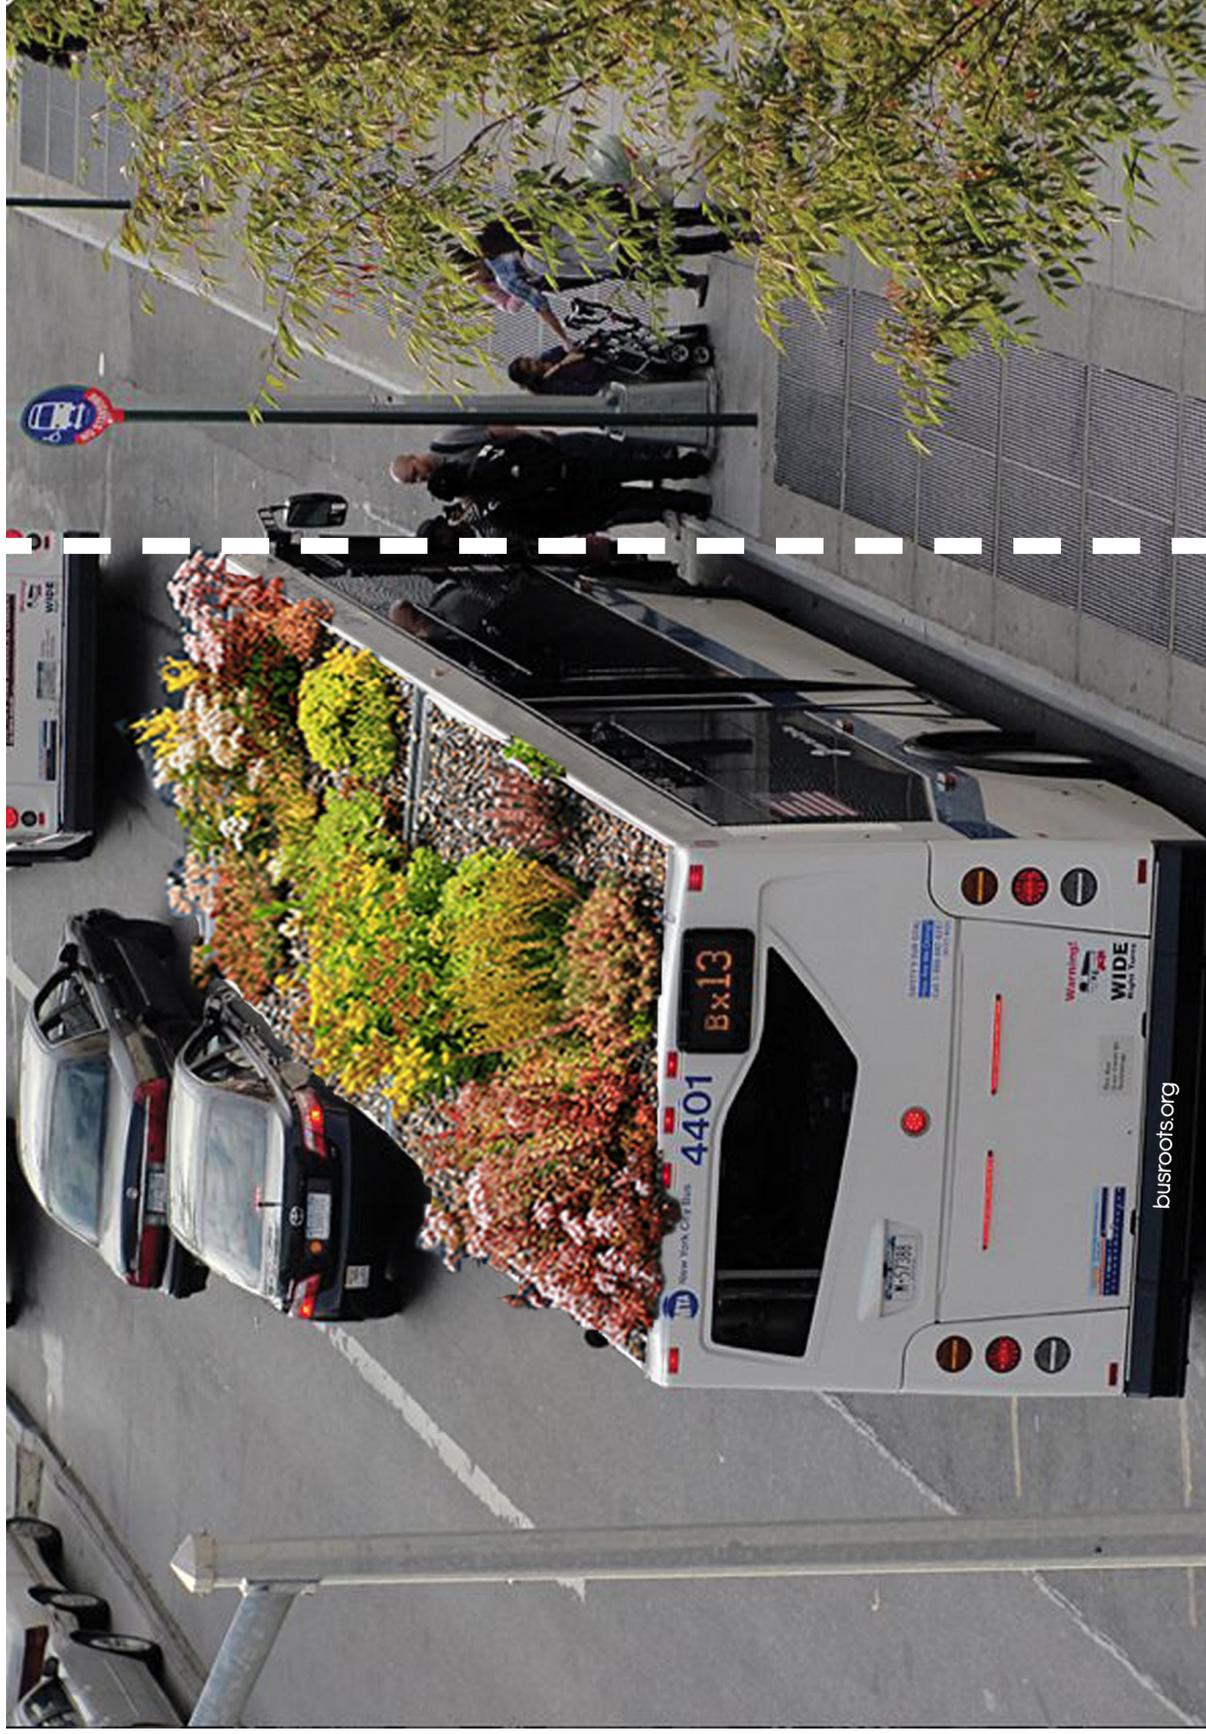

A

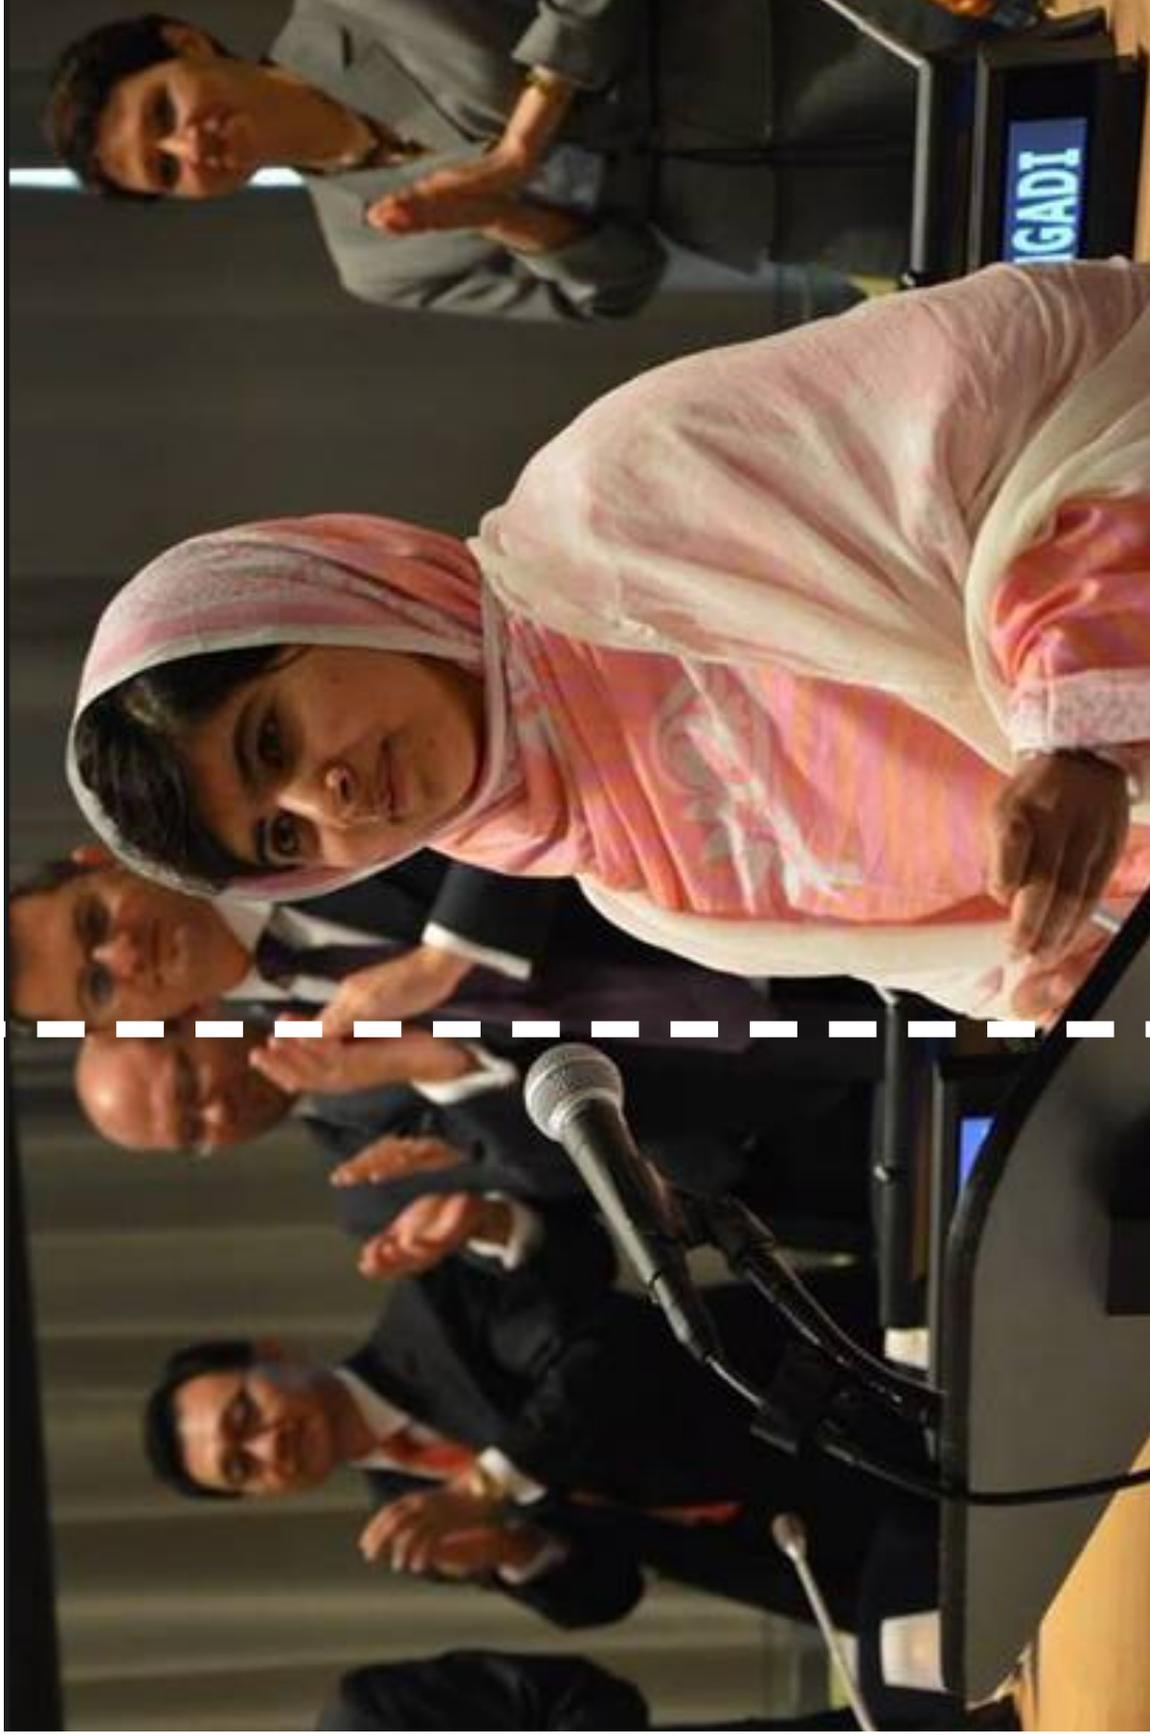

A

B

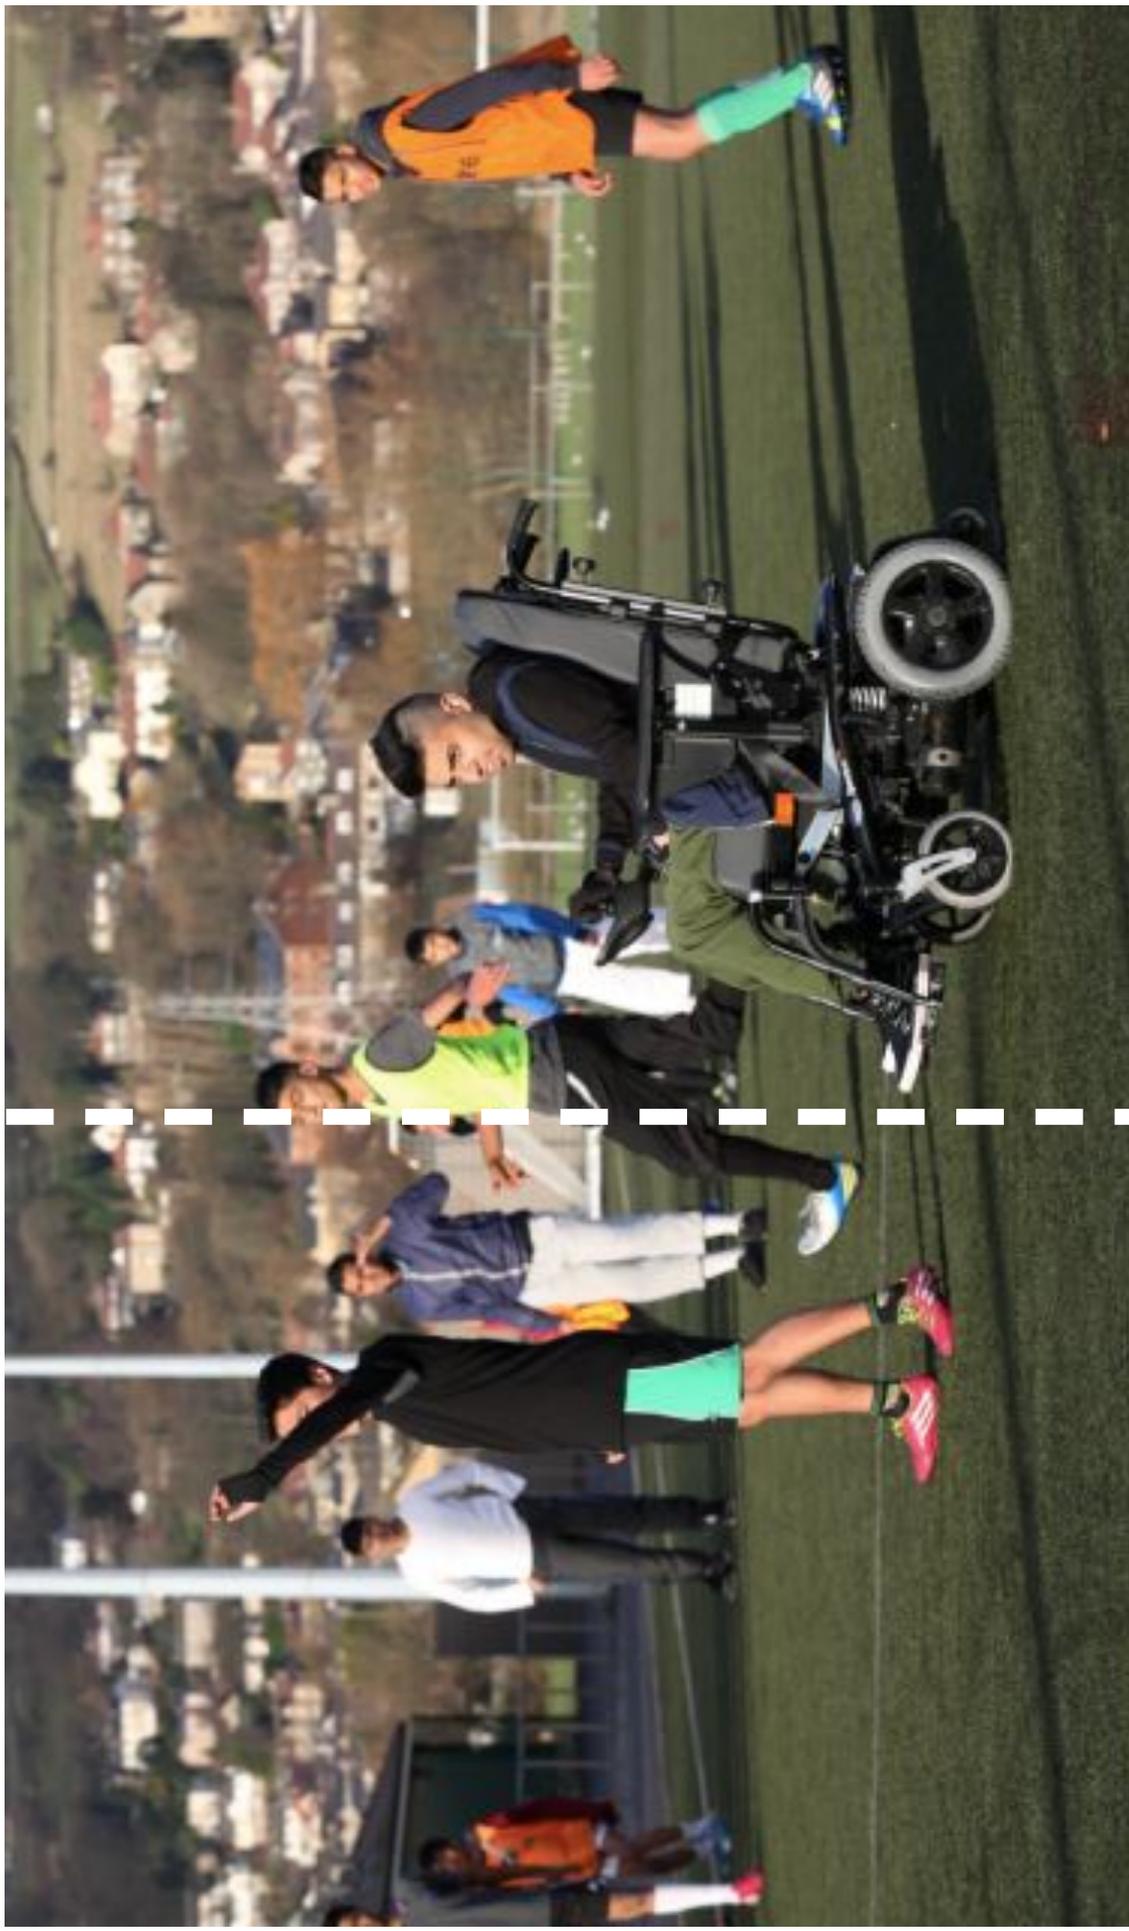

B

A

B

Boys make great hairdressers too!

Mae C. Jemison blasted into orbit aboard the space shuttle Endeavor, September 12, 1992, the first woman of colour to go into space.

Fathers can help care for children just as much as mothers.

Mary Ann Barnett, 90, falls from 18,000 feet in tandem with professional skydiver Mike Doke.

Roqaya Al Gassra made history when she became the first to run in a hijab during the 2004 Olympics. She was named flag bearer for Bahrain at the 2008 Olympics.

The Paraisópolis favela (Paradise City shanty town) borders the rich district of Morumbi in São Paulo, Brazil. Credit: Tuca Vieira

Mount Kilimanjaro is the tallest point in Africa. It is also the world's largest free-standing mountain. Even during the hottest time of year, its peaks are snow-covered.

Bus Roots is a living garden planted on the roofs of city buses. It's an effort that rose out of New York City designer Marco Antonio Castro Cosio's graduate thesis at New York University.

On July 12, 2013, her 16th birthday, "the bravest girl in the world" Malala Yousafzai stood at the United Nations and delivered the speech of a lifetime to more than 500 young people aged 12-25 from around the world.

Sohail Rehman, 21, was born with spinal muscular atrophy, which forced him into a wheelchair by the age of 13. Obsessed by football he studied sports technology and coaching at college. He went professional after letter from Sir Alex Ferguson praising his work.